Udall: U.S. troubled

By CHUCK KOFOED
Universe Asst. News Editor

Udall's speech Monday in Wilkeson, Idaho, was a reflection of the current state of the nation. The senator, who has been close to several years as chairman of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, said in his remarks about the "troubled times" America finds itself in today. "We are in troubled times," Udall said. "We are in troubled times," Udall said. "We are in troubled times," Udall said.

Lead sought in slayings

ATLANTA (AP) — Squads of officers and police officers worked from door to door in four Atlanta neighborhoods Monday, asking residents for the "one little lead" might help solve the slayings of 10 children in the last 15 months. Out 50 officers and firefighters in southside precincts began the search Monday morning in an effort to find clues. City officials say eventually may be 500 public safety personnel. The city's black community has been deeply disturbed by the killings and the disappearances of four other children. The remains of the victim, 7-year-old Latonya, were discovered Saturday during a search by hundreds of volunteers. Meanwhile, the city council unanimously approved a 90-day, 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. curfew for children under 15 which a city official said was "not punishment of children but a safety measure."

The council also agreed to add $20,000 to a reward fund which already totaled more than $50,000. Mayor Maynard Jackson signed both measures into effect immediately. The officers and firefighters were asking citizens to "think back in the past, when something may have happened that may not have been considered significant," said Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown. Bill McKenney, an assistant to Atlanta's police chief said, "Just one little lead and it could all come together." He cited New York's "Son of Sam" investigation, in which a traffic ticket led to the arrest of David Berkowitz in the series of killings that terrorized the city for a year. Four firefighters from Station No. 2 set out Monday morning on Jonesboro Avenue in an area where two children have disappeared. They knocked on doors and gave out photographs of the missing children, a pamphlet on safety tips for children and a questionnaire asking information about abnormal occurrences in the neighborhood. "I would like us to stay on it until we get something solid — I think it's a good idea," said one fireman, who declined to give his name. "Everybody is enthusiastic about it. Anything to make this city safe, that is what we are all about."

likewise and oil embargoes which would make Americans quickly realize that energy was not an eternally renewable resource. This era of low productivity and economic problems "caused stress and strain" between numerous segments of society, Udall said, such as between generations. He used Social Security as an example. After explaining how the program was designed to have children pay into it in hopes of benefiting during their retirement years, Udall said, "The money isn't there anymore. So the 25-year-old kid is saying 'you've increased my payroll taxes. I can't take it.'" "The story of the '80s is how we can adapt," Udall said, adding that Americans will have to learn how to be a "conservative society." Part of the problem is it's hard to get away from the idea that we have to conserve. We still want to drive our big autos." One decision Americans will have to deal with is nuclear energy, Udall said. "During the 1950s, the plan was to develop nuclear power; it was the way to deal with the energy needs of the third-world countries, helping in their rapid development... the original intentions were seen as good." The congressman said that early attitudes toward nuclear energy and the eagerness to develop it caused problems which Americans are now being compelled to face. "There was a standard, unwritten rule that as we industrialize we say, 'If we have the technological knowledge, go ahead; there may be some side effects, but go ahead.'" Thus there are the Agent Orange problems — "Who knows how many thousands of birth defects may result," the Love Canal, New York, and the residents of southern Utah. In Utah during the 50s, America was gearing to "fight nuclear war," Udall said, telling how soldiers at Jackass Flats would practice running up to areas hit by nuclear arms to see what damage was done. "Those people are 65 years old now, and their cancer rates are outrageous." Udall did not advocate any position toward nuclear energy, but when asked later, he said he would phase out nuclear power, replacing it with various forms in developmental stages.

orange clothing," Robertson said. He said the accident could have been avoided if the two men had observed a few of the basic hunting safety procedures. "Farm people are used to being out in the open all the time without many people around, so when they go hunting, particularly the older ones who don't readily adapt to change, resist the law requiring hunters to wear hunter orange," Robertson said. "On the same day another man just north of St. George stopped to help someone carry a deer. His rifle was loaded and as he was helping with the heavy load the rifle fired, killing him," Robertson said. "On a again negligence was the main culprit. If the man had observed a basic rule and opened the action on his rifle it could not have fired," Robertson said. In Wasatch county Saturday, two men were hunting together when one of them, Jim Hutchings a resident of Salt Lake City, was taking his rifle out of his vehicle he pulled it rifle toward himself and it fired. Non-resident car permits 'aren't worth the trouble'

By KEVIN ALLAN
Assistant News Editor

Students who complain to BYU Security Police about the "non-resident student permits" being issued this year are going to the wrong people — if Security had its way the state regulation would be done away with. So says Lt. Mike Harroun of the traffic office. "It's an administrative headache," says Harroun concerning the regulation, which requires out-of-state students to register their cars with the state as well as with the university, or face the possibility of a citation and fine. The law, which many students apparently think originated at BYU, has been on the state lawbooks for years, Harroun said. "It's a nuisance both for the students and for us," he said. "A lot of people have come in questioning it, thinking it's a university regulation." Though enacted by the state years ago and mentioned in the BYU traffic publications "as long as I have been here," Harroun said, the regulation hasn't been strictly enforced until this year. "We got word this year that roadblocks would be set up, and that's a $25 fine," he said, "so we felt we owed to the students, to make them aware of the regulation." In previous years, he said, students weren't challenged concerning the permits. "We didn't insist because we knew no enforcement was being done," Harroun said. This year, however, students were told when they applied for parking permits they had to have the stickers. The idea, he stressed, was to keep students from getting ticketed by the police. Roadblocks were set up near BYU campus earlier this semester by both Provo City Police and the Utah Highway Patrol, officials from both police agencies reported. "We're not holding roadblocks just for that (to apprehend those without non-resident student stickers)," Provo Police Capt. Max Littlefield said. "Other citations are given as well." He said the city police force has been enforcing the law "for at least 25 years since I was a rookie." Roadblocks have been set by the Utah Highway Patrol specifically to deal with the permits, according to Sgt. John Moon of the state agency. "This year the State Tax Commission noticed a lot of cars with out-of-state tags," he said, "so they asked the Highway Patrol to direct more attention to registration laws."

A BYU Security Police officer checks an out-of-state vehicle for a "non-resident student permit." Out-of-state students are required to register their cars with the state as well as the university. The regulation is an "administrative headache," according to Lt. Mike Harroun of the BYU traffic office.

ing it (enforcing the regulation) before," Moon said. He said the Highway Patrol simply hasn't emphasized catching people with permits as much as they are this year. Enforcement may be "a little overdone," he said, and for that reason, "the recent roadblocks were primarily for the student stickers." "One of the major problems with the regulation," Harroun said, is the hassle the students have to go through to get the permits. When a non-Utah student comes to the traffic office, he explains, "we have to explain to him that he can't get a parking sticker unless he gets the non-resident student sticker as well. Then," he continued, "we have to give him a temporary sticker, and he has to get his car inspected if it doesn't have a valid state inspection." "We don't really really," Harroun said, "we've had him in the office twice, which is not necessary." The fact that many states do not require inspection stickers adds to the problem, he continued. "We flooded area service stations with kids wanting inspections this year," he said. "In fact, a number of area stations even ran out of inspection stickers." Paul Ashton, president of the Petroleum Retailers Organization and an area dealer, said the number of students who wanted inspections this year presented problems. "They really enforced the law this year," he said. "It's a detriment to us," he said, because inspections do not generate much money. Most retailers in the area are "not very excited about doing inspections," according to Ashton, but they had to do it or risk losing business to other stations. Littlefield said one of the reasons for the law was to "assist in getting cars up to safety standards." Some Residents go to the polls today to decide whether to retain the existing manager form of government or another form and whether to appoint Sunday opening of Orem's municipally-owned recreation center. The polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. today at 10 locations. Voters cast their ballot at Orem Jr. High following elementary schools: West, Cherry Hill, Westmore, Geneva, Sharon, Windsor, and SCERA Park.

Orem voters to determine form of city government

Manager form of government and expects that city residents will retain the current form because of positive committee findings. Orem Director of Recreation Jerry Ortiz said he has heard pro and con comments regarding Sunday opening of the recreation center, but tends to think residents will oppose the opening. Orem City Manager Daryl Berlin said he thinks some residents who would otherwise not participate will go to the polls because of the Sunday opening issue.

Following the opening weekend of the deer hunting season at least two Utah residents are dead, with numerous hunting-related injuries, according to spokesmen at the Utah County Sheriff's Office and local hospitals. Lee Robertson, Director of hunter safety for the Department of Wildlife said in one incident Saturday, a man described as an elderly rancher and neighbor set out on a deer hunting expedition in Southern Utah's Kodachrome Flats. The two split up to look for game. The older man reached a brushy area and sat down, when his nephew rounded the bend he saw something in the bush and shot it. As he moved in to see what he had got he found the body of his uncle, Robertson said the identity of the two men was not known to him at this time. "Neither of the hunters was wearing the hunter

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The speaker of Iran's Parliament said Monday it will decide in the "next two or three days" on conditions for release of the 52 U.S. hostages and that he thinks it unlikely the Americans will be tried as spies. Iranian revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, meanwhile, agreed to allow a war mediation committee of Islamic heads of state to visit Iran, Tehran radio said. Khomeini stipulated the group was to be confined to "investigating the criminal invasion" he said was ordered by Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, according to the radio. But acceptance of the delegation, even on a conditional basis, was seen as a small step toward solution of the four-week-old Iran-Iraq war at the head of the Persian Gulf. In a telephone interview from Tehran, Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani said the war was not affecting the hostages, who have been held since Nov. 4, and that he thought the conditions for their release would be the same as those stated earlier by Khomeini. Last month Khomeini said the United States must return the late shah's wealth, cancel claims against Iran, release frozen Iranian funds and guarantee non-interference in Iran. He omitted an often-stated demand that the United States apologize for past ties with the late shah's regime. The Majlis, empowered by Khomeini to decide the fate of the hostages, "will in the next few days announce its decision," Rafsanjani said. Although some hardline members of Parliament have called for spy trials for at least some of the hostages, the speaker said he thought it would be "a very remote possibility." The militants, who seized the U.S. Embassy in Tehran nearly a year ago, called it a "spy nest" and they threatened to try the hostages as spies. Asked if he thought the hostages would be released, Rafsanjani said, "If America accepts our conditions, yes." Observers in the United States considered as a possible new condition remarks made in New York Saturday by Iranian Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai, who sought removal of U.S. radar planes from Saudi Arabia. In an interview Monday, Rafsanjani said, "What Mr. Rajai meant was that the United States must show its good will for the Islamic revolution because the Iranian people know the United States as their enemy." The United States said it had sent the four AWAC early warning planes at the request of Saudi Arabia, which was concerned the war between its neighbors might spill over into its territory. Rajai claimed the planes were being used to monitor Iranian troop movements for Iraq and said the United States should remove them. In Washington, Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie reiterated President Carter's stated concern that Iran's territorial integrity was being threatened by the war, and said the stability and cohesion of Iran are important to the whole region.

FDA offers tampon warning label

WASHINGTON — The Food and Drug Administration offered a tentative warning label for tampon packages Monday as a response to the association between tampons and the sometimes fatal disease, Toxic Shock Syndrome.

The FDA, the agency which regulates tampons because they are considered medical devices, offered a 30-day comment period on its proposal.

During that time, the public will be asked to say whether a warning label is appropriate, what any warning label offered should say and whether a package insert offering details on tampon use in addition to a warning label is justified.

The FDA proposal, which was to be published in Tuesday's edition of the Federal Register, reads:

"WARNING: Tampons have been associated with Toxic Shock Syndrome, a rare disease that can be fatal.

"You can almost entirely avoid the risk of getting this disease by not using tampons. You can reduce the risk by using tampons on and off during your period.

"If you have a fever of 102 degrees or more, and vomit or get diarrhea during your period, remove the tampon at once and see a doctor right away."

Should the FDA decide to go ahead with the warning label after the comment period ends, manufacturers would have 60 days to begin carrying them on their packages.

Court upholds FDA in Laetrile ban

WASHINGTON — A Supreme Court decision allowing the Food and Drug Administration to ban Laetrile as a cancer treatment for the terminal ill affirms the safety and effectiveness standards the government uses for drugs, federal regulators said Monday.

The justices on Monday allowed to stand a lower court ruling that said the constitutional right to privacy is not grounds for permitting use of Laetrile since it does not otherwise meet federal drug standards.

FDA spokesman Wayne Pines said there would be no immediate impact from the court's decision.

Pines said the agency will proceed with an attempt to dismantle a special system that allows cancer patients who believe they are near death to obtain Laetrile treatments in the United States if approved by a federal court.

If the FDA is successful, legal use of Laetrile would be barred under most circumstances except in four clinical trials designed to determine whether the controversial substance has medicinal value.

Those tests, being conducted by the National Cancer Institute, are at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn.; the University of California at Los Angeles; the University of Arizona at Tucson and the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York.

"The effect of the Supreme Court denial is to say that Laetrile is to be regulated in the system established for all other drugs," Pines said after the court's ruling was announced.

Hearing for Patty, attorney probed

SAN FRANCISCO — Newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst Shaw is entitled to a new hearing on a robbery conviction, and it might be a good idea to look into the conduct of her attorney, a federal court ruled Monday.

Mrs. Shaw, the former Symbionese Liberation Army fugitive, argued that her rights were violated because defense attorney F. Lee Bailey spent much of his time negotiating publication rights to her story instead of working on her defense. The book was never published.

"Bailey's potential conflict of interest is virtually admitted," the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said in its ruling. It added that there are "serious questions as to whether Bailey, and to the extent of his participation (co-counsel Albert) Johnson, have been guilty of conduct unbecoming members of the bar."

It suggested that a lower court might order Bailey and perhaps Johnson to demonstrate why they should not be disciplined. The court said Bailey's involvement in the book contracts may have violated several American Bar Association rules.

No plans for such an investigation were announced. Mrs. Shaw was reported vacationing in London and was not immediately available for comment.

A spokesman for Bailey said the lawyer's only comment is "that he would certainly be happy to participate in any hearing that was required and explain the defense."

A date for Mrs. Shaw's new hearing had not been set.

Atomic fallout passes over U.S.

WASHINGTON — An invisible cloud of nuclear debris from a Chinese atomic bomb has not produced any detectable radioactive fallout in its flight over the United States, officials said Monday.

The leading edge of the 500-mile-wide air mass was to reach the East Coast at 8 p.m. EDT Monday and move out over the Atlantic on Tuesday, officials at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said.

The cloud reached the U.S. Northwest early Sunday. The Environmental Protection Agency said its monitoring stations underneath the cloud had not picked up any measurable fallout readings.

"No significant exposures are expected from direct radiation. We don't anticipate any cause for concern," the EPA said. The agency said there is still the possibility that radiation levels in milk may increase and the agency said it will begin sampling milk on Tuesday.

Based on prevailing wind currents, the cloud was expected to follow a southeasterly path across the United States with its midpoint running along a line from Washington state to Virginia, NOAA said.

The agency predicted the radioactive air mass would extend from the New York-Pennsylvania border to mid-Florida when it reaches the Atlantic.

Provo man charged in sexual abuse case

A Provo man was charged with forcible sexual abuse to a male minor after his arrest Saturday in a downtown Provo residence, Provo police said.

Roy Hutchison, 30, is charged with picking up a 15-year-old minor at Provo Continental Trailways Station and performing forced sexual acts to a minor at his Provo residence, according to police reports.

Patrolman Robert Smith reported finding a naked boy kneeling beside burning clothing Saturday morning outside Hutchison's residence. The boy was incoherent and was transported to Utah Valley Hospital, police said.

Police said the boy told Smith he was approached at the bus station by a man who offered him a place to stay. The boy missed his ride back to Cedar Valley Boy's Ranch in Lehi. Police said the boy was returning to the Ranch after a visit with his foster parents.

The minor told police he went with the man and "watched TV until the man changed into a dress and feminine underclothing and made sexual advances to him," authorities said.

The boy said the man persuaded him to get drunk and then the man took off the boy's clothes and tried to sexually assault the minor, police reported. Police said the boy then jumped from the man's bedroom window.

"The next thing the boy said he remembered was being naked on the sidewalk and watching the man burn the boy's clothes," police said.

Detective Terry Glade said the boy was treated and released from Utah Valley Hospital.

The detective assigned to the case, Don Messick, said Hutchison is in custody and had no further information.

Suspect description aids in investigation

A composite facial sketch is aiding in the search of a man who held the manager of the Silver Fox Camp Ground in Provo at gunpoint as he took $123 Thursday afternoon, Provo police said.

The police report describes the suspect as a white male between the ages of 22 and 28, of slim build, about 5-10 with shoulder-length curly brown hair.

The suspect wore wire rim glasses and was last seen wearing a black and grey plaid coat and blue jeans, the report said.

Theresa Payne, manager of the camp ground, located at 1500 S. and 100 West, said the robber held a gun and told her to lie down on the floor and "not to move or my head would be blown off."

cars, he said, "are just accidents looking for a place to happen." Ashton said on the whole, out-of-state cars inspected at his station this year were "in a little better shape" than Utah cars.

Another reason he doubts the usefulness of the law, Harroun said, is that many of the students ticketed at area roadblocks had received suspended fines in court. According to Harroun, a clerk in the Eighth Circuit Court, clerks have received instructions from the judges to suspend the fines of those students who acquire the permits.

The main purpose of the law, according to Roland Ashton of the division of motor vehicles for the Tax Commission, is to make it possible for students who are non-Utah residents to live in Utah during the school year without having to acquire Utah tags and pay property taxes in the state.

Individuals at several Utah colleges and universities expressed confusion as to the purpose of the law, though most thought it was used by the state to aid police agencies in identification of vehicles.

Stan Pollock, coordinator of traffic at Utah State University, said, "As near as I've been able to tell, it is basically for identification purposes."

Hazelgren said "he was just fine" after the crash and required no medical attention.

McKee is at Utah Valley Hospital.

Jack Anderson claims Carter plans October invasion of Iran

By TAMMI WRIGHT
Universe Staff Writer

Source close to President Carter have indicated that plans for a powerful military invasion of Iran in mid-October, 1980, have been prepared, said Jack Anderson, a political columnist.

During his appearance on the Phil Donahue Show last Thursday, Anderson reiterated claims made in his column that an invasion is planned for October to insure Carter re-election in November.

The White House said Anderson's allegations are grotesque, totally irresponsible and completely false.

The ostensible purpose of the operation is to rescue the hostages," Anderson said. "But the person the President really wants to rescue is himself."

National crises
An invasion of Iran at this time would precipitate a national crisis, he said.

"Political studies show that support for the incumbent president has always soared dramatically during a national crisis," Anderson said. "The President has assessed the political consequences and has concluded the invasion would be popular with the electorate."

Anderson said he has spoken with sources close to the President and with military advisors.

"He (the President) has asked military planners for good appraisals of this mission," Van Atta said. "During the primaries President Carter called a 7 a.m. conference to say that 'we may free the hostages soon.' He did this on the morning of a critical primary."

The people who are planning the military operation are worried that such an operation would not succeed, Anderson said.

"They think the President's judgment has been distorted by his political ambitions," he said. "They are deeply concerned."

One unsuccessful rescue attempt has already been tried, Anderson said. "That was a fiasco."

As a result of the aborted rescue attempt, the hostages were scattered throughout Iran, he said.

"The likelihood that they could be rescued under the present circumstances is pretty dim," Anderson said. "The chances are that if a rescue attempt is mounted more people will be killed than will be saved."

Across the Iranian border, within easy striking distance, are 23 Soviet troop divisions more than the United States has in its entire armed forces, Anderson said.

"There is no way that we could conquer 23 divisions except with nuclear weapons," he said. "The President is aware of this."

Nuclear weapons
Carter has already ordered a study of the use of nuclear weapons to stop the 23 divisions, Anderson said.

"The Soviets have already declared that if we move in with military force that they will intervene," he said. "This is enough to cause some deep concern, according to military planners."

Anderson said planners told him they had expressed their concern to Carter and he had overruled them.

The political motives in Carter's dealings with the hostage situation have been noted and reported all along, Van Atta said.

"Journalists have reported similar incidents before," Van Atta said. "During the primaries President Carter called a 7 a.m. conference to say that 'we may free the hostages soon.' He did this on the morning of a critical primary."

After the April election, the Washington Post carried several articles saying it was a political move, he said.

Anderson rebuffed a suggestion from Donahue that reporting the fears of presidential advisors was thin journalistic ice.

"This is a story that the electorate are entitled to know about," Anderson said. "It's a story that came from the people who are the closest to the President."

"No one knows what goes on in Carter's mind, but everyone who is watching the President is speculating as to what he's doing," Anderson said.

"We are saying 'this is what the people who are working on the plan believe,'" Anderson said. "It's a belief based upon their conversations with the President and upon the orders that he has given. I think it's entirely justified."

BYU coed discovers the benefits of weight lifting. It is an excellent way to maintain body tone and prevent buildup of

Weight lifting gaining popularity

Women enjoy weightlifting

By HEIDI BOLINDER
Universe Staff Writer

Women's weight lifting is not as popular as some forms of exercise, but many women are discovering its benefits.

It seems many women are engaging in weight training as a means of conditioning, said L. Jay Silvester, powerlifter and instructor in the physical education department.

Strength training, done to the right extent, can be a great fit to any woman," said Silvester. "By using weight training, a woman can improve her overall fitness."

Weight-training program can help a person function better in life, he said. It will also make a person better in many activities, such as skiing, tennis, racquetball and basketball, he continued. "Weight lifting is less popular than jogging among women," said Silvester. "But the general population is finding out how weight lifting training is."

In the last five years women's weight lifting has become a wide activity with several competitions being held for women, he said. Some of these have been broadcast on television. "I may be the reason people are becoming more aware of it lifting."

A difference between body building and fitness is the amount of repetition and frequency required, Silvester said. Most women use weight training as a means of fitness and not body building, he said.

New club to orient students

By TH HAMILTON
Universe Staff Writer

A new club is being organized on campus. It will aid incoming freshmen and new students.

The club, New Students Assistance (NSAA), is being organized and funded by the School Relations Department.

NSAA, formerly the Buddy Program, has been added to give new students personal attention they can't get from the university's administrators, said Irene M. "Who knows more about student life than students? Administrators can only do so much to help the new student," she said.

Changing The Buddy Program to a club was the idea of D. Mark Barton, director of School Relations. "Besides changing the name... we rebuilt the program and added a couple phrases to make it more productive," said Barton.

"Our present concern is recruitment for the club. Fliers and letters will be sent out to most BYU students in the next few weeks to promote the club," said Miss Knepper. "A promotional lecture is also planned for November."

American Education Week declared

President Jimmy Carter designated the week of November 16-22 as American Education Week and called upon Americans to reaffirm their commitment to excellence and the quality of the national opportunity.

American Education Week affords us time to reflect about the needs and importance of education," Carter said. "It gives us time to evaluate the accomplishments of an education system that serves more than 58 million people."

A theme for this education week is "Education in the 80s—Education for the future," said Willard R. "Education is more than 60 years old and was created by the National Education Association. It was in World War I that the Bureau of Education approximately 25 percent of the men called for military service were illiterate and about 29 percent were physically unfit, McGuire said.

Other groups sponsoring the week are the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, the National School Boards Association, the American Legion and the U.S. Department of Education.

The American Education Association, which has 1.8 million members, encourages the week's observance by distributing public information. Local education officials observe the week by holding school assemblies and by meeting with parents.

Sharing time together can be a rewarding experience for both international students and the families.

International students, area families participating in Host Family Program

By PAULA JEAN ROGERS
Universe Staff Writer

Lasting friendships and culture awareness are benefits from participating in the Host Family Program. "The Host Family Program has been developed to match interested international students with volunteer families so each will have an opportunity to understand the other's way of life and enjoy a lasting friendship," said Lorraine Drake, chairman of the program, in her international student newsletter.

According to Ms. Drake, families can include international students in meals, outings, Family Home Evenings or any other activity the family wishes.

"We don't have him over enough," said Lorraine Drake of her family's foreign student, Jit Hai Lim from Singapore. One of the main purposes of the program is to get the students away from campus life and let them relax in a home atmosphere, said Mrs. Anderson. Since Lim cannot go home for three more years, it is important to let him experience some family life, she said.

Mrs. Anderson and her husband, Larry, have three children ages 15, 12 and 4. The family intends to sponsor Lim until he graduates, she said.

"It's as much a benefit to us as it is to the foreign student," Myrna Pratt, mother of the family sponsoring Junko Tsujisaki from Japan, said. "The program makes you more tolerant of others and gives you insights."

Mrs. Pratt said her children living at home, ages 20, 18, and 15, understand another culture and a different way of doing things because of Miss Tsujisaki.

Mrs. Anderson agreed. "Lim is smart, clever and asks many questions," she said. She described Lim as having a good command of the English language and having a vast knowledge about America.

Mrs. Anderson said Lim offered her family information about his native land when he brought them maps and brochures. "Lim has told us so much about his country," she said. "He likes to talk to Larry about the stock market."

Both the Andersons and the Pratts include their international student in a variety of experiences.

Since Lim cannot go home, the Andersons have him over during the holiday season, Mrs. Anderson said. "He loves to be involved in the festivities," she said. "Lim brought us gifts, knick-knacks, and a sample of fabric typical of his country last Christmas."

Lim has cooked three meals for the entire family — each with five or six dishes, Mrs. Anderson said. Miss Tsujisaki, along with some of her Japanese friends, also cooked meals for her sponsor family, Mrs. Pratt said.

Mrs. Pratt said after she sent a box of cookies and candies to her son's mission president in Japan, Miss Tsujisaki advised her on what to do next time. She told her Japanese men do not like sweet things. The next time, Mrs. Pratt sent a book on Mormon life with large pictures, and Miss Tsujisaki translated the captions into Japanese for easy reading.

The Andersons plan to take Lim to their ward Halloween party, Mrs. Anderson said. The family plans to have an activity at least once a month, she added.

According to Mrs. Pratt, her family has included their foreign students in birthday celebrations, wieners roasts in the canyon, holidays, and Family Home Evenings.

For both the Andersons and the Pratts, this is their third year participating in the Host Family Program.

All those who are interested in participating in the program, either a potential host family or an international student, should contact Grace Bullock, 224-3926, or Ms. Drake, 378-2695.

ACT scores up for Provo area

By DIANE FAIRBANKS
Universe Staff Writer

Test scores, which dropped during the past few years in the Provo School District, are back up this year and some school officials blame the previous low scores on crowded conditions.

The average composite American College Test score in the Provo School District went from 20.2 to 19.6 in 1975-76. It again dropped in 1976-77 to an all-time low of 19 and stayed there during 1977-78, said Noel Greenwood, director of secondary education in the Provo School District.

The scores went back up to 20 during 1978-79 and then to 20.1 for 1979-80, Greenwood said.

"Eight-tenths of a percent is a significant difference," he said. "It doesn't happen by chance."

The low scores which occurred during 1975 through 1978 may have been caused by the large number of students attending Provo High School, Greenwood said.

"During the years that the scores were low we had about 2,200 students," he said. "Once we put half the students in Tim View, the scores went back up. I'm inclined to believe that was a factor."

The ACT is a fairly accurate measure because it is a standardized test and is supposed to measure the same things over the years, Greenwood said.

"As you score higher on the test you are better prepared for university-level work," he said.

Another reason for the average's accuracy is the high percentage of students who take the test in the Provo School District, Greenwood said.

"Nearly 75 percent of the students at Provo High School took the ACT this year," he said. "And at Tim View 81 percent took the test."

Provo rates very high in both test scores and participation on a national scale.

Geneological Society of Utah donates microfilms to Y library

By AUDREY GASKING
Universe Staff Writer

If you think you have housekeeping problems, take heart! The BYU branch of the genealogical library, located on the fourth floor of the Harold B. Lee library, has 140,000 rolls of microfilm and no place to put them.

"The films are a gift to BYU from the Genealogical Society of Utah. Right now they are stacked in boxes next to the genealogy section of the library because there are not enough cabinets to house them."

The films, which were received a year ago, contain information vital to genealogical research. Roger C. Flick, branch librarian, said they include books, newspapers and census and land records from the United States as well as other countries.

Many hours of volunteer labor will be needed to learn everything the collection contains and organize the films so they are more easily accessible, Flick said. "We have already spent more than 8,000 hours putting the films in order," he said.

The library plans to store the data from the films in computer terminals eventually, Flick said. In the meantime, cabinets are needed to keep the rolls orderly and accessible.

"We'll need $152,000 to purchase enough cabinets to store all these rolls," Flick said. "Everything for the genealogy library is purchased through donated funds."

"Everything" includes the drawers and rooms full of microfilm, microfiche, microprint and microfilm readers contained in the library. The monetary value becomes apparent when it's realized that one census record for the United States costs $45,000 when purchased under the LDS Church discount. Regular price is $120,000.

The library is staffed completely by volunteers, Flick said. These workers, who must have an interest in genealogy, provide service and instruction to patrons of the genealogy library.

In addition to genealogical data services, the library offers workshops to Utah Valley residents interested in genealogical research.

"Every Wednesday night we offer four-generation workshops," Flick said.

Y telescope to relocate

Common pollutants have necessitated the relocation of the 24-inch research telescope to a new observatory, the department of physics and astronomy has announced.

The new observatory will be built across Utah Lake, on West Mountain, and will be completed sometime in the spring of 1981, said Dr. Lynn McClurg, dean of the College of Physical and Mathematical Sciences.

The new observatory is needed because the bright lights of the area, heat from the city and the location of the Spencer W. Kimball Tower inhibit its use in the Eyring Science Center. The new location will allow researchers to see stars now obscured by reflecting lights of the city, he said.

"There are a lot of problems with the current location," McClurg said. "Increased particulate in the air is causing light pollution." McClurg said that light reflects off these particles and into the lens of the telescope, hiding many stars from view.

A second problem is

McMahon regains WAC honor

By BECKY COLLYER
Universe Staff Writer

BYU quarterback Jim McMahon was named the Western Athletic Conference offensive player-of-the-week after leading the Cougars' attack in their 70-46 win over Utah State Saturday.

McMahon, a 6-1, 182-pound junior from Roy, Utah, completed 64 percent of his attempted passes by hitting 21 of 33 for 485 yards and handed off for 132 yards rushing. He was responsible for 617 of the Cougar's 710 yards of total offense.

So far this season, McMahon has completed 120 of 195 attempted passes, for 62 percent and 2,089 yards. He has been responsible for three rushing touchdowns and 23 passing touchdowns. He has punted six times for an average of 29.0 yards a punt and 174 yards.

This season, McMahon has been named WAC player-of-the-week twice and BYU quarterback-of-the-week four times.

Last year, McMahon redshirted, but in 1978 he started out the season primarily as a punter until the third game of the season.

He replaced injured quarterback Marc Wilson in the Colorado State game where he accounted for 112 yards passing, 80 yards rushing, two touchdowns and engineered a victory. As a result of his performance, McMahon was named the Chevrolet player-of-the-game and WAC player-of-the-week.

In the second half of the Oregon game, where McMahon was 10 of 19 for 204 yards passing, he was awarded the number one quarterback role and led BYU to a come-from-behind victory.

He was named WAC player-of-the-week once more during the 1979 season against Wyoming when he completed 24 of 36 passes for 317 yards along with 49 yards rushing.

Because of an injury, McMahon rested on the sidelines during the entire Hawaii game, but came back to start against the University of Nevada-Las Vegas in Japan one week later.

McMahon's overall regular season stats that year totaled 248 yards rushing and four touchdowns, and 57 of 176 passes for 1,307 yards and six touchdowns. He also averaged 39 yards punting in 41 punts.

He was the first sophomore selected as an All-WAC quarterback and AP All-America honorable mention.

"He (McMahon) can drop back or sprint out. He has a great arm with the mobility to do it all," said Coach LaVell Edwards.

Ten Cougar Players gain weekly honors

By BECKY COLLYER
Universe Staff Writer

As one result of BYU's 70-46 triumph over Utah State Saturday, 10 Cougar players received player-of-the-week honors.

At the quarterback and receiver posts, Jim McMahon and Clay Brown were given recognition.

McMahon, this week's WAC offensive player-of-the-week, completed 21 of 33 attempted passes for 485 yards and six touchdowns. He was responsible for the majority of BYU's 710 yards of total offense. His performance in the Utah State game broke several NCAA and school records.

Brown, who last year led the nation in punting with a 45.3 yard average, was all-WAC as a tight end for 1979. He was an honorable mention All-American for Associated Press and United Press International and received coaches' player-of-the-week honors five times. Saturday, he caught five passes for 86 yards and two touchdowns.

Linford shared honors as offensive linemen-of-the-week.

Chuck Ehin, a sophomore from Layton, Utah, saw limited varsity action as a freshman Saturday, his performance won him defensive linemen-of-the-week honors. Ehin had four unassisted tackles and one assist for a Utah State loss of 5 yards.

Honored at the defensive back position was Mark Brady. Brady, who received the same honor twice in 1979, had four unassisted tackles and four assists.

According to a college referee who wishes to remain anonymous, Junior Filiaga's attack of an official was the result of the officiating crew's loss of control.

"In the third quarter of the game I said to my wife, 'the game has degenerated and got away from this crew. That can happen to any official in any game. The key is to get back in control.' They didn't," said the NCAA referee.

"There are a few questions that need to be answered before a complete reason for the unfortunate incident in last Saturday's BYU-USU game can be understood. The game in Logan involved a split crew of officials. Two of the officials were from the WAC and two from the PCAA. Ideally this should not be a factor because officials take the rules from the same book. But as Coach Hays, BYU assistant coach, indicated, there was an obvious difference between BYU's conception of offensive holding and the official's conception.

The unnamed referee brought up the point that an official is not just there to call penalties. "The crew has a responsibility to make sure no one plays at an unfair advantage. If something happens away from the ball, and has no bearing on the play or creates no harm to the player, the official should use good judgment and let it go. An of-

Jazz claims T-shirt crowd not tuxs

By LOIS M. BLAKE
Universe Staff Writer

It's not important to know jazz to enjoy it, says Sam Cardon, keyboard player for Synthesis, BYU's jazz-oriented ensemble.

"While technical proficiency is essential to play jazz," he said, "when you go to a jazz concert, you should go to relax and have fun. It's not a place for a starched shirt and tuxedo."

Cardon, a junior in studio composition and recording from Farmington, N.M., says jazz is honest music.

"Everything you hear is personal interpretation," he adds. "I enjoy the excitement jazz creates, the spontaneous nature of it and the communication inside the group."

K. Newell Dayley, director of Synthesis, says, "You say jazz to a lot of people and you get all sorts of ideas about what it is, as well as some negative connotations. Different people think of jazz in different ways."

"The name 'Synthesis' tries to get away from that and imply a pulling together of elements."

According to Cardon, even among the musicians there are differences in style that have to be worked out in rehearsal.

"There's a wide spectrum of music that is all classified as jazz — swing, bebop, funk jazz, rock jazz. Not everyone knows the same styles, so they don't play the same way," he says.

Cardon said if a person is totally unaware of jazz, he has to get used to it.

"Commercial jazz, including such artists as George Benson, Chuck Magioni, and Quincy Jones, bring people into the fold," he explains. "Then they can enjoy the classics of jazz."

The most important skill for someone to play jazz is being able to improvise, Cardon says.

"You have to know the chords and scales. You need a feel for the music. You have to know the music you're playing so you don't get surprised when someone does the unexpected."

Cardon finds the spontaneity of the music the best part of jazz. "It's fun and refreshing," he says.

According to him, not everything that happens sounds good, but the players try to work those problems out in rehearsal as part of the integration of styles. "It takes a lot of work to be a good jazz player," he says.

The group practices together one hour Monday through Thursday, and receives one hour of credit for their participation.

Cardon believes a jazz player needs leadership, ability and be able to sacrifice for the group.

"You get a lot of strange rhythms when you're playing, and unexpected things crop up," he explains. "You have to be responsible enough to learn your part so you don't get surprised you forget what you're doing."

"Also, you have to blend with the other players. You can tell when someone is saying 'Look at me.' You have to sacrifice for the sound."

Dayley says one emphasis in the group is to improve the personal communication between members.

"You have to communicate with each other," says Cardon. "In jazz, the music sort of molds together. Even though there are different personalities in the group, we're pretty compatible. The director (Dayley) can relate to my personality."

Cardon says the musical experience of the current members of the group varies from person to person. "With some people it's a hobby," he said. "With some it's a way of life."

The group would like to be in Synthesis.

Group returns from Greek tour

Twenty weary Young Ambassadors and their advisors climbed off a chartered bus at 8 p.m. Saturday in front of the Social Hall, home from a three-week tour in Greece, Egypt and Romania.

After singing behind the Iron Curtain at the National Palace Theater in Bucharest, Romania and performing in village fairs outside Athens, Greece and visiting Egyptian museums in Cairo, the group returned to BYU a lot of people would like to be in Synthesis.

"Several of the performers were married and two of the men took their wives as technical people this time," Randy Boothe, entertainment director said. The older, more experienced members put together their international shows as well as collected the funds to go on tour in less than one month's notice.

"There's a lot of competition," he says.

"As far as jazz as a profession is concerned, it's like a lot of other fields. There's no competition at the top or the bottom. It's all in the middle where everybody is struggling."

He says most of the Osmonds' players are former members of Synthesis.

"Four or five members of the Synthesis compose music. Some of it is real good, very professional," he says. "Some of it isn't. The best stuff we like to include in concerts, though most of our material comes from jazz literature."

Synthesis generally goes to one jazz festival a year, said Dayley.

"BYU does consistently well," Cardon adds.

"Last year the group was one of the top three finalists in the festival it attended."

The group performs on campus each semester, said Dayley. This semester Synthesis will play in the deJong Concert Hall, HFAC, Nov. 19 and 20, Dayley said the concerts are usually standing room only.

"We try to put on concerts to help those who know nothing about jazz to go out loving it," Dayley said. "We do some esoteric and challenging pieces, but we like to give a solid sample."

"Synthesis" became the name of the jazz group in 1973, but the roots go back to 1962 when students petitioned the music department for an ensemble. From a dance band, it has grown into BYU's top jazz group.

Besides Synthesis, there is another jazz ensemble on campus, two Young Ambassador bands and combos. Dayley said people regularly challenge into Synthesis from the other groups.

'Focus 80's: A Changing Environment Challenges JCPenney Management'

Walter J. Neppi

President and Chief Operating Officer
JCPenney Company, Inc.

Change is nothing new to JCPenney. Started in 1902 in Kemmerer, Wyoming, with first day cash receipts of $446.49, the Company found it necessary to establish its national headquarters in New York City close to its major merchandise sources just 12 years later. Reaching the quarter century mark, it had 900 stores in 45 states ringing up sales of $152 million. From Main Street U.S.A., it headed downtown to the heart of the retail business district of major cities, setting up large department stores, and when its urban customers started the trek to the suburbs, JCPenney followed.

Along with its debut in regional shopping centers in its fifth year — the Company entered another area of retailing that has literally exploded around us of late: Catalog. Physical expansion in the '60s meant the addition of new lines of merchandise — so-called deliverables such as furniture and electronics — and this presented new learning experiences for a retailer whose reputation was built on soft goods. Opportunities and challenges abounded as JCPenney began drug and discount retailing, expanded abroad, and entered the insurance business.

$11 billion in sales last year

At the end of 1979, the tally was 2,145 stores, of which 517 full line department stores were positioned in major metropolitan markets. Sales for the year topped $11 billion. The Main Street Merchant from a small mining town in the West had come a long way since the turn of the century, embracing change except in what it considered the essential ingredients of its business — the quality and value of the merchandise it offered its customers.

Change means challenges

So much for history. The 80's present new challenges to JCPenney's management. Take energy, for which JCPenney's bill in 1979 exceeded $170 million. The inflationary economy, New technology. And something as basic to a retailer as the changing lifestyles of the American people and the increasing emphasis they are placing on personal fulfillment on, as well as off, the job. What has happened to the typical American family behind the white picket fence — the image that used to come to mind when many retailers thought about their customers?

Walter J. Neppi, president and chief operating officer of JCPenney, discusses these challenges when he delivers the keynote address for Retail Week at BYU, Thursday, Oct. 23 at 4 p.m. What he has to say has application far beyond the confines of the country's third largest retail chain. Neppi's lecture is sponsored by the Skaggs Institute of Retail Management and the School of Management's Executive Lecture Series. The address is open to the public.

JCPenney roots in Utah

In discussing Retail Week with Skaggs Institute Director Doyle Robinson, Neppi noted the long association JCPenney has had with the State of Utah and Brigham Young University. The Company's first headquarters was established in Salt Lake City in 1909, and the business was incorporated under Utah laws in 1913. The same year, at the Hotel Utah, Company officials formulated the "Penney Idea," seven operating principles that guide the Company to this day. In 1968, Brigham Young University conferred an honorary doctorate degree upon Mr. James Cash Penney, who in one five year period in the early days had located 14 other facilities in the State. Two presidents of JCPenney began their management careers in the State. The presidents of JCPenney began their management careers in stores in Utah—Earl Sams and Albert W. Hughes—and said Neppi "we continue to look to this state and to Brigham Young University for well educated, highly motivated leaders. We are proud that the Institute places more student interns with JCPenney than with any other Company and that more of them return to us after graduation than any other Company."

Career began in 1940

Neppi started with JCPenney as a sales associate in Carroll, Iowa, in 1940. Following service in the Air Force, from which he emerged as a Captain in 1945, he returned to his home state and resumed his career. He became assistant manager at Colorado Springs, Colo., the next year and opened a new store in Albuquerque as manager in 1954. District management came next and this eventually took him to the central office in New York City in 1961. Neppi was promoted to general merchandise manager for hard lines in 1965 and elected vice president in 1967 and a director in 1968, the same year he was named general sales and merchandise manager. He assumed the position of director of merchandising in 1971, executive vice president in 1972, and president and chief operating officer in 1976.

He is a member of the Boards of Directors of the Sun Company, The Fidelity Union Bancorporation, and the Fidelity Union Trust Company and a trustee of the Geraldine R. Dodge Foundation, Inc. He is a director of the American Retail Federation and a member of the Advisory Board of the College Placement Council.

BYU produces opera

By LOIS M. BLAKE

BYU students are fickle about attending operas due to the conditioning they have received throughout their lives, said Dr. Clayne W. Robison, artistic and stage director for "Die Fledermaus."

"Die Fledermaus" is the first opera to be performed this semester. With music by Johann Strauss, the production runs Oct. 24 through Nov. 1 in the deJong Concert Hall and the opera will be sung in English.

According to Robison, operas at BYU have difficulty selling the first night. "But if it's a hit, word of mouth carries quickly," he said. "If you're not in the right place to hear that it's a good thing, you're in trouble," he added.

According to Robison 90 percent of Americans avoid opera, thinking it is foreign and strange, even though it can be a very satisfying experience.

"For years, every episode of 'Life with Father' showed Jiggs trying to avoid being dragged to the opera," he said. "This ambience about opera has pervaded the culture."

Robison said he wants the audience to enjoy a delightful, fun evening.

"The music lifts, you'll hum the tunes all night long," he said. "Although the phrase isn't too appropriate at BYU, the stage play is like champagne bubbles — very light. It's about friends enjoying each other, playing tricks. It's a pleasant evening of entertainment."

The play is Johann Strauss's most popular work. "It's probably among the 10 or 15 most popular operas in general," he said.

Robison said "Die Fledermaus" is double cast, meaning every leading part has two performers. Operas are so expensive only a few can be performed each year, and double casting gives more students the opportunity to participate, he said.

"It means twice as much work though," Robison said.

This is Robison's eighth year of directing BYU operas. He performed professional opera (15 in San Francisco) before coming to teach.

Robison estimated the minimum cost of the production at $12,500. He said if every seat is filled for every performance, the opera will just break even.

"Any opera or any artistic enterprise counts on box office to bring in no more than half of its income," he said. "BYU regards the opera as an educational enterprise for everyone — for the cast, the players in the orchestra pit, the audience — so it's willing to put operas on."

Bargain guide beneficial

By KIM KAATMAN
 Entertainment Editor

Shopping on a Shoestring in Utah. By Midge Nielsen and Kathy Lillywhite. $3.98

In the Provo/Orem area designer jeans can cost $50 or more, depending on where you shop. "Shopping on a Shoestring in Utah," a bargain guide, now on the market and its authors are two BYU juniors.

Mrs. Midge Nielsen and Mrs. Kathy Lillywhite compiled this bargain guide "because there are lots of bargains in Utah. We started finding them (the bargains) while we were struggling newlyweds and have continued to search out the best quality goods at the lowest prices."

The authors said they developed a neighborhood reputation as "the bargain experts." Interested friends could call the women regarding bargain buys and they could refer their friends to "the experts." "Eventually," said Mrs. Nielsen, "calls started coming in excessive amounts and so we published the book."

The book lists hundreds of sources that offer fine quality at low prices in a "Yellow Pages" style. Addresses and phone numbers of more than 300 stores that offer merchandise at 20-70 percent off retail price are listed. Some of the items included in the index are appliances, arts and crafts supplies, books, clothing, food, babies and toys. Warehouses and retail stores are listed with a description of their bargains.

The clothing, food and freebie sections are particularly interesting to students, especially when money saving tips on designer jeans at 60 percent off, eggs at 34 cents a dozen and firewood free for the taking are given.

The "Yellow Pages" make-up of the bargain guide makes finding the bargains even easier. For example:

said I want to pize to the president for some of the things I've said on radio. Like when he was con- ferring with Mr. Churchill on that ship about war strategy. War strategy meaning where and when will we attack the enemy and how will we keep Eleanor out of the crossfire. In those days Eleanor Roosevelt was going all over the world, you know."

Hope, the companion and kibitzer of eight presidents, from Roosevelt to Carter, comes down with his own case of Potomac Fever in his latest special for NBC. He runs for president himself in the special, which will be telecast Oct. 28, just one week before the presidential election.

Hope says the presidents have never nerved his gentle ribbing, particularly since he keeps his more pointed jobs off the air and saves them for the camaraderie of face-to-face delivery.

"We kidded Truman about being a haberdasher and playing the piano," he says. "The president loved it. I never dug that deep. I refused to do that. First of all, commercially it's not wise if you're selling. If you go on the air and knock the president in a vicious way people resent it."

No president ever asked Hope for jokes to use publicly, although he turned over every golf joke he had to President Dwight D. Eisenhower. He says, "The last time I saw Ike I told him a golf joke. It was at Walter Reed Hospital. Ike nealy fell out of bed." Hope's dressing room is covered with signed pictures from presidents and other historical figures. One who signed a picture, Lyndon B. Johnson, was a target because of his barbeques, fast driving and his penchant for turning out the White House lights. Hope says, "I was there for a dinner once and he was leading me through the White House. Once he turned the lights out before I got out of the room. I said, 'Mr. President, wait! I got out of the room. I haven't got a white cane, you know.' Hope says he wants to put all of his presidential jokes into a book.

ural telephone hardships ften caused by hunters hunters who shoot at aerial phone wires might think they're demonstrating their shooting skills to their friends, but they may be cutting off someone farther down the road.

Unfortunately accidents of this type frequently occur in areas where phone service is needed most—in rural areas. Kenneth O. Jensen, Bell's Utah public relations officer, adding that sometimes hunters need the phone service in cases of emergency.

Paul Collins, special services manager for Mountain Bell in Ogden, said one time a transmission booster was shot by hunters, isolating the entire town of Cedar Fort, leaving them without service for seven hours.

"If the line damage is in an area inaccessible to vehicles, especially in winter weather, days could pass before repairs could locate the downed line," he said.

An aerial wire was severed last year by a shotgun blast on the west side of Utah Lake, for one day," Collins said. "We found the remains of some hunters were probably standing underneath the cable when they shot at the birds."

ocal retarded citizens hold day-long bazaar booths selling dinner food items, baked breads and handicrafts will be featured at an all-day bazaar to be held Nov. 15.

The bazaar is sponsored by the Utah Association for Retarded Citizens (UCARC) and will be held at new Oakridge School.

This will be the biggest fund-raiser yet, said Louise Gammell, president of the UCARC. "The day will be involved in the identification and excitement of it."

Donations of handicrafts or baked goods are welcome, Mrs. Gammell said.

The UCARC is made up of volunteers, parents, teachers and friends of the retarded who serve as advocates for the rights and protection of these handicapped individuals, she said.

"It is estimated that three percent of the United States population is retarded," Mrs. Gammell said. "With those figures, for a county our size, nearly 6,000 persons are retarded and can benefit from our organization."

ducator receives award for distinguished service

Alison W. Sorenson, president of the Technical College in Provo, was named the Alumni Distinguished Service Award from BYU's College of Education Oct. 11.

Sorenson has personally led the college's development of curriculum programs in business technology, industrial and health occupational education and community service," said Curtis N. Van, dean of the College of Education.

The technical college has grown a few tarpaper-covered structures to present, two-campus, multi-million dollar operation during Sorenson's tenure, Allen said.

Sorenson has been president of the college since 1949.

He holds two degrees from BYU: a bachelor's in industrial education and a master's in educational administration.

Sorenson is currently an administrative vice president of the Utah National Parks Council of the Boy Scouts of America.

He has served on the Board of Directors of the Provo Chamber of Commerce and as chairman for the Utah County chapter of the United Way Fund of Utah.

General Mills, Procter & Gamble, IBM. When you think about your future, think beyond the name.

Our name, Target, might not be quite a household word yet, but we're getting there. And getting there is the reason we're aggressively seeking advanced degree graduates in Marketing and Finance. Staffing an energetic retail organization with the "cream of the crop" requires selectivity and sensitivity on our part, and yours. And, if your mind's not made up, and you're still narrowing down the field, consider who we are, and what we do at Target. Target is a rapidly expanding chain of low margin stores born out of the Dayton Hudson Retail Group.

From Minneapolis-St. Paul to Houston and Denver, our billion dollar retailing operation continues to meet the challenge of rapid growth and profitability.

Because of this ability to recognize and react to a constantly changing customer base.

Because it has firmly positioned itself to serve the everyday shopping needs of not only the young family, but consumers of all ages and demographic patterns who today increasingly shop for value as well as quality.

What keeps TARGET on target is its self esteem — expressed in its well organized, efficient operation.

And its attention to value quality. Not 30,000 items. But rather 65,000 items. Not a stress on private-labels. But rather brand names. (Some 70% of TARGET's hard goods are brand names.)

And an approach to management that leaves no surprises. For the customer. Or for management.

No surprise that TARGET has achieved greater sales per square foot than most retailers in the country.

No surprise that TARGET provides all the professional fulfillment and career growth you're thinking about.

Yes, there's quite a story behind the Target name, and more coming. We'd like an opportunity to tell you about it, "firsthand".

Mud slinging attracts women

"Over the last 20 years, we have taken some tentative steps away from the nuclear precipice. Now, for the first time, we are being advised to take steps that may move us toward it." So stated President Carter Sunday in a 15-minute radio spot which cost him $22,000.

Such political mud slinging may cost Ronald Reagan a spot in the indicate Americans want their nation to assume a stronger defense posture — a posture hailed more by Reagan than Carter rhetoric — and although Reagan currently leads public opinion polls, Carter may rise above Reagan in the final hours of the campaign battle.

How? Carter may pocket the women's vote. The latest CBS-New York Times poll reports that Carter leads Reagan in securing the women's vote 36 percent to 27 percent. Presumably Reagan trails because of the anti-ERA and anti-abortion planks in his platform. Reagan's pledge to put a woman on the Supreme Court has not attracted as many women's votes as he had hoped for. However, neither candidate has even approached majority support from women.

If Carter can combine the pro-Democratic feelings of women on women's issues with plenty of "Reagan is a warmonger" references, a landslide vote by women in his favor might occur.

In the past 10 years, Gallup polls have consistently shown 64 percent of women versus 48 percent of men classifying themselves as "doves." Carter has identified this election as a choice between a dove, himself, and a hawk, Reagan. If he can succeed in placing the two images in the minds of women voters, he may win the women's vote. Since there are five million more women voting than men, this could mean a second term in office — a second term made possible by some strategically brilliant mud slinging.

McKay offers experience and seniority, Hansen will not make politics a career

Gunn McKay

Jim Hansen

Some would accuse Democrat Congressman Gunn McKay of being a Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde of politics — assuming an air of conservatism when in Utah, but churning up to and voting with liberals when in Washington.

"That's nonsense," McKay says. "I've been characterized as the most conservative Democrat this side of the Mason-Dixon. The national Chamber of Commerce gave me an 82 percent rating, and it's not a liberal organization."

McKay dismisses charges of his being a big-spending liberal and invites voters to look at his record — a record which spans five terms of office.

"I've voted on thousands of bills. To draw five or six out and say I'm liberal is like putting two scriptures together which have different meanings. You can say anything you want," McKay says.

He also talks a lot about his seniority in Congress. "Seniority is important. When you've got the inside track, you've got some influence you wouldn't have otherwise."

In McKay's eyes, seniority is the major issue of the 1980 congressional race. As he puts it, "Who's in a position to represent this state?" California has 43 votes, we have two. Small states offend that by keeping their people there long enough."

McKay speaks of his influence as chairman of the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Military Spending: "Take the defense depot in Ogden. The military was trying to close it down; when they requested to build new facilities at Tracy, Calif., they were going to scrap Ogden. Very quickly, I did not include Tracy in the appropriations bill. They came to me and said, 'McKay, we got the message.'"

Thus, McKay says his re-election is essential to protecting Utah's interests. As an encore, he says his influence on the House Appropriations Subcommittee has helped to keep funding for the Central Utah Project.

"California... would be delighted if we had no power to get funding, because they would get the water," he adds.

The Congressman contends his seniority status does not make him a "career politician," just as his having voted to raise the national debt does not make him liberal.

Putting a ceiling on the national debt is not the place to stop spending. When you run out of money, and you've already bought Central Utah Project, revenue sharing, roads, Social Security, you've got people waiting for money. So you go to re-finance, just like you do in your home," he explains.

The place to stop spending is to not vote for the costly programs in the first place, McKay suggests.

Although McKay admits he has not "voted every time for a balanced budget," he has introduced a Constitutional amendment and an amendment to the Budgetary Control Act which would require a balanced budget.

If people want to curtail national government spending and large bureaucracies, McKay suggests state and local governments reduce their demands on the federal system.

"If a state gets in trouble, it wants the federal government to declare it a disaster area. If a city gets in trouble, it looks for grants," he observes.

McKay says he supports MX because of improved Soviet accuracy with its missiles. "We need to adjust, to be able to move missiles within 15 minutes, so the Soviets don't get them all."

If Jim Hansen wins the First Congressional District seat Nov. 4, it won't be long before he is back in Utah working in insurance. That's the way he wants it.

"People make a big thing out of seniority," Hansen says. "Congressmen build their bureaucracies by seniority. I would limit the terms congressmen serve to make three for representatives and two for senators. Then they don't come back and become power brokers. If you knew you only had six years, you'd be there as a servant and not as a master."

Hansen, a conservative Republican, is aiming to break into national politics, after having served several years in state and local offices. For the past eight years he has served on the state House of Representatives. He has been House Speaker since 1978.

Hansen says his goal in the big time political arena is to "return government to the states and communities."

Hansen has directed much of his campaign against big government, including "career congressmen" and deficit spending. He advocates a political philosophy in which legislators and their laws alike do their jobs and skip the scene.

If elected, Hansen would spend his two-to-six years as a congressman following a strong conservative philosophy.

Among the things he proposes to do is defeat the Equal Rights Amendment, build the national defense, trim the fat off the federal bureaucracy and return governmental power to states and communities.

Hansen is an ardent supporter of Gov. Ronald Reagan whom he sometimes refers to as "President." He says a Republican president would need congressmen who are willing to work with him and implement his policies.

In talking about conservatism, Hansen refers more to his opponent than to himself. "McKay plays down his being a Democrat when he is in the state, but when he is in Washington, he is tied to the liberals," he says.

"His record speaks for itself," Hansen often says, charging McKay with voting "every time to increase the national debt" and voting for congressional pay raises. The GOP hopeful's alternative would be to work for a constitutional amendment to require a balanced federal budget.

Hansen says he views growth as Utah's major concern during the 1980s. However, he admits he could do less to address the problem as a congressman than he could by staying in the Utah legislature. The growth stemming from energy and military projects "is largely a state issue."

But where the national government is involved — as with impact payments — Hansen said he would work for a situation where "legislation moves in and moves out. I would like to see sunset legislation and oversight powers."

Oversight powers would enable Congress to control laws after they are made, instead of giving omnipotence to non-elected bureaucrats.

Like most Republicans, and some Democrats, Hansen has targeted a few bureaucratic agencies to be need if he is elected. Included in his elimination list is the Department of Energy — a body which seems fair game for both parties this season.

Hansen said he would take some agencies, such as EPA, out of the federal government and make them state entities.

As for U.S. military needs, Hansen has expressed support for an "improved land-based missile system," a new manned bomber and upgraded conventional forces.

Y abuses speech freedom

Editor: For a church school that would like its ideas and beliefs accepted or at least tolerated, BYU is quite intolerant of others' beliefs.

Take for example Paul Mitchell, the born-again Christian who went through campus "denouncing Mormonism."

Many a time as a missionary in New York working with college students, I found myself in the same situation as Mitchell. Luckily I was never completely rejected, as he was at BYU, even if the school opposed Mormonism.

I think the Dean of Student Life, David Sorenson, handled the situation quite poorly. If Mitchell were really sincere, there would have been no problems created by letting him continue his crusade, even if it was in some small corner of the campus, like the stadium parking lot.

A rule I found at most schools I spoke at while on my mission was that if there was a student with the same religious beliefs as mine, who would actively support me while I was on campus, I was allowed to present my views once a semester.

If Mitchell really wasn't sincere or if he was here as a publicity stunt, Sorenson did exactly what Mitchell wanted him to do. Now he can tell the world the truth — BYU is intolerant of other ideas.

Deer hunting justified

Editor: This is to those of you who fallen prey to such narrow-minded attitudes as were presented in the "Sorry, but there's only one justification for deer hunting."

Gentlemen, let us be of good for it was the Lord who commanded as part of His Word of Wisdom the partake of the beast of the field 49:19-49:23. And since when we justify obedience to the Lord

Now we, like most silent minorities have been unjustly criticized and labeled as bloodthirsty for our desire to enjoy this most worthwhile sport. We have also been accused of just our actions each October by those behind the excuses of wanting our freezers with meat, wanting out among nature and desiring to see the herds so that fewer deer will each winter. May we submit our critics that these so-called justifications might possibly be our motives and reasons for hunting, with the pure enjoyment that from this sport.

To those of you who suffer from dreaded disease that some hypocrisy, we can only say, "We the cow, chicken or fish ever you!" Enjoy your dinner.

TAKING ISSUE

By BOB SALLANDER
Wire Editor

The major presidential candidates agree the United States cannot remain idle in the face of ever-increasing Soviet strength and world tension, but they do not agree on just what needs to be done.

The Carter administration claims the United States is prepared to defend itself. This claim is made amidst reports that most navy vessels are unready for combat, Air Force bombers are nearing the scrap heap and the all-volunteer army is insufficient for current defense needs.

Carter has indirectly admitted these reports are true by registering 18-year-old males, which by his own admission could lead to a draft if necessary, and by supporting the deployment of the MX missile.

Ironically, Carter recently claimed that though he has cut the defense budget, military spending has increased. How he could do both at the same time, only his statistician knows for sure.

While Carter lauds the readiness of the U.S. military, Republican Ronald Reagan questions whether the United States can defend itself.

Reagan says attacks on a country result from perceived weakness, and by being the strongest military power in the world, the United States will preserve international peace.

Reagan opposes the draft, and proposes the all-volunteer army be enhanced by increasing wages.

He proposes to get the money to increase soldiers' wages overall defense spending by cutting other government programs. However, the former California governor is unclear about which programs he would eliminate.

Independent John Anderson also advocates no draft and better pay for military personnel. In addition he would reduce the number of American troops abroad.

Minor presidential candidates, who traditionally seem to take more extreme positions, generally support a stronger U.S. military.

Though candidate Barry Commoner's plans for national defense are vague, his opinion of the major candidates' solutions is clear. In his political spots on the radio, he summarizes his feelings in one succinct but unprintable word.

Then there is the Socialist Party candidate Andrew Pulley, who, if elected, would be the first black president in American history and would have the first female vice president in American history.

Pulley wants to do away with military spending altogether. The money saved, he says, would go toward schools, recreational facilities and other social needs.

Clearly America cannot afford to forget about defense spending, but it is also clear defense spending must be restrained.

To engage in an unlimited arms race would take national attention away from domestic problems and concentrate efforts on a global "keep up with the Joneses" game. Yet, to ignore defense preparations would be to invite foreign aggression onto U.S. soil.

Reagan's approach to defense — being strong enough to cause would-be aggressors to have second thoughts before attacking — would be the best military posture for the United States.
